Chapter 2: Families Throughout the World

Chapter Context

Throughout time and throughout the world, people have lived in families. As a social institution, families are at the center of all societies because they fulfill needs that few other institutions can. Nonetheless, societies develop their own style in how marriage, families, and kinship should operate or what roles members should fulfill. This chapter examines the functions that families provide. It reveals both the similarities and differences in marriage, family, and kinship patterns throughout the world. As a social institution, families reflect the environment, historical period, and culture in which they are found.

Lecture Outline

2.1 Compare family relationships

- I. Drawing upon structural functionalism, sociologists and family scientists often discuss marriage families in terms of the important functions they serve for individuals and for society at large.
- II. Marriage is the cornerstone of these functions.
  - A. It is a socially legitimate sexual union.
  - B. It is begun with a public announcement or ceremony.
  - C. It is undertaken with some idea of permanence.
  - D. It has a more or less explicit marriage contract that spells out reciprocal obligations between spouses, and between spouses and their children.
- III. Marriage regulates sexual behavior. Cultural norms make it clear who can have a sexual relationship with whom and under what circumstances.
- IV. Marriage clarifies property and economic ownerships. Friedrich Engels ([1884] 1902) tied the origin of the family to males' desire to identify heirs so that they could pass down their property to their sons.
- V. Marriage allows for social placement, status, and roles. All members of society relate in some way to the basic structure of that society, usually in a way that preserves order and minimizes confusion and conflict.
- VI. Families are intended to provide the care, warmth, protection, and intimacy that individuals need.

2.2 Analyze how family patterns affect daily life

- I. External control over mate selection operates through norms of endogamy and exogamy.
  - A. Endogamy refers to norms that encourage marriage between people of the same social category, such as their own racial, ethnic, religious, age, or social class background.

- B. Exogamy refers to norms that encourage marriage between people of different social categories.
- II. Marriage has real consequences for the way we experience family life. There are expectations about whom and how we marry, where we should live, who should have power, and how we inherit and trace our lineage.
- A. Monogamy is marriage between two partners (if not for a lifetime, at least for a period of time).
  - B. Polygamy allows for more than one spouse at a time.
    - 1. The most common type of polygamy, polygyny, is the practice in which husbands can have more than one wife.
    - 2. Polyandry is a rare marriage pattern in which several men share one wife.
- III. There are several ways in which power and authority are distributed in society.
- A. Patriarchy, which means rule of the father, refers to a form of social organization in which the norm is that men have a natural right to be in positions of authority over women.
  - B. Matriarchy, a form of social organization in which the norm or expectation is that the power and authority in society would be vested in women. This as a theoretical alternative because no known cases of true matriarchies have ever been recorded.
  - C. Egalitarian refers to the expectation that power and authority are equally vested in both men and women.
- IV. There are different ways in which a family's descent or heritage can be traced.
- A. In a bilateral pattern, descent can be traced through both male and female sides of the family.
  - B. A patrilineal pattern is one in which lineage is traced exclusively (or at least primarily) through the man's family line.
  - C. Matrilineal descent patterns are characterized as having the lineage more closely aligned with women's families rather than men's families
- V. Cultures have different expectations about ideal living arrangements.
- A. A neolocal pattern is one where the newly married couple establishes its own residence and lives independently.
  - B. In a patrilocal pattern, it expected that the newly married couple will live with the husband's family.
  - C. A matrilocal pattern is one in which the expectation is that the newly married couple will live with the family of the wife.

2.3 Evaluate the impact of modernization on social life

- I. German sociologist Ferdinand Tonnies (1963) suggested that modernization represents a progressive loss of gemeinschaft, or the intimacy found in primary relationships.
- II. Tonnies argued that industrialization changed the fabric of social life, and industrialization and urbanization results in a society of largely impersonal secondary relationships, called gesellschaft.
- III. Sociologist William J. Goode (1963, 1993) used existing data from several regions of the world and found that changes in the family resulted from industrialization and modernization.
  - A. Mate selection became more free
  - B. There was a shift away from extended families
  - C. Kinship evolved to a bilateral pattern
  - D. Families became more egalitarian
- IV. World Systems Theory suggests that changes in families can be traced to changing global economic markets and political structures.

2.4 Contrast family experiences in India, Japan, and Sweden

- I. India is a poor, developing country.
  - A. India has a high fertility rate, although it has been reduced substantially in recent years.
  - B. India has a sex-ratio imbalance, due to patriarchy and a higher value placed on males.
- II. Japan is a highly developed, wealthy, and healthy nation, yet Japan has a tradition steeped in segregated and traditional gendered expectations.
  - A. Men tend to work long hours and women do the majority of housework and childcare.
  - A. Fewer Japanese women are marrying, and those who do are marrying much later than ever before.
  - B. Japan's birthrate has declined.
- III. Sweden is one of the world's wealthiest nations, its people enjoy a high standard of living, and it is more egalitarian than many cultures.
  - A. Swedes have sometimes been criticized as anti-family they are less likely to marry and more likely to cohabit and have children outside the confines of legal marriage.
  - B. There is a high degree of support for families, including paid maternity and paternity leaves, and child/family allowances.

- C. The Swedish government makes a concerted effort to push for an equal distribution of power and opportunity.

Research Assignments

The following research assignments pertain to the main topics and/or themes of the chapter. Please respond by writing a paper consisting of 1000–1500 words.

[Research Assignment Title]

Choose one developed and one developing country. Using 2–3 scholarly resources, research how historical events and culture have changed marriage and family patterns including family functions. Summarize the event and the resulting change, and compare and contrast how modernization theory and world systems theory would explain these changes. Demonstrate your ability to apply these theories.

Experiential Learning

Conduct an informal interview with two people who grew up in cultures different from one another. Ask them for their perspective on the functions of family. Listen for their responses to your open-ended questions. Do not prompt them with the “variations and universals” as described in your text. Jot down notes, and later compare their lists to the one devised by the theory of structural functionalism. What further research could you do to examine the modern functions of family in your community?

Note: Always check with your professor about your college or university’s institutional policy on data collection for classroom purposes, and adhere to guidelines for the protection of human subjects in social research.
